

American's Chinese Wife Solves Problem Of the Ideal Combination in Marriage

Kindness and Gentleness of the Husband and the Home Loving Qualities of the Woman Assure Happiness, Declares Mrs. Ah Yung Kwai Dromberger.

She Incidentally Tells of the Chinese Woman Who Is So Big That She Was Made a Member of Parliament for Fear She Would Lick a Lot of Folk.

Marguerite Moores Marshall.

"I think that the ideal combination in marriage is the Chinese wife and the American husband. The latter is so kind and good that he will not impose on any woman. And the Chinese wife is so gentle and such a home-lover that she would never think of imposing upon her husband. So of course they will live happy ever after."

That is the very natural belief of Mrs. Ah Yung Kwai Dromberger. As you gather, the Dromberger marriage is a living exemplification of Mrs. Dromberger's quaint theory. She is an attractive and well-educated young Chinese woman, whose father is head of the customs department in Shanghai. Her husband is a Philadelphia who sells automobiles.

There was a picturesque tale about Mrs. Ah Yung's doing a sort of Oriental Pouchoutas stunt and effecting a personal rescue of her future spouse from the fanatics of the Boxer rebellion. But the truth of their meeting, though less highly colored, is more favorable to China as a progressive nation.

"I met my husband just as an American girl would meet her," Mrs. Dromberger explained with a pretty dignity. "Because of my father's position in the customs house he was brought into contact with most Americans who came to Shanghai. And he liked them very much and did all he could to serve them. He was particularly attracted to the young men in the navy who seemed lonely and homesick."

(AH YUNG KWAI)

MET HER FUTURE HUSBAND AMERICAN FASHION.

"Mr. Dromberger was one of these, hardly more than a boy. My father asked him to dine at his home and, of course, to meet the members of his family. And so I was introduced to him in my own parlor, and so—" Mrs. Dromberger stopped and was detected in the act of blushing, though she has been married eight years.

She speaks flawless English, by the way, and wears strictly English, or rather Parisian, hats and frocks. She is at least three inches taller than the average Chinese woman, slender as a reed, and she walks lightly and firmly on feet that have apparently never aspired to be "golden lilies."

"Are you not a college woman?" the reporter asked.

"No, I was educated at a private school in Philadelphia," she replied. "I stayed with my husband's people before I was married. Since then we have been traveling all over the world—India, Italy, Switzerland, and, of course, through my own country. I had a home in China, but only for a little while. We have come back to America, because I needed a rest, and we shall stay in Philadelphia till Christmas."

"But do Chinese girls usually enjoy such social freedom as you had before you married?"

"Oh, ever so many of them in these days," she replied, enthusiastically. "Particularly in Shanghai, which I think is the most enlightened and progressive place in the whole republic. There the girls are educated, they sing and play and dance, they give parties, they go out and, therefore, they have a chance to meet young men simply and naturally, as Western girls do."

CHINESE WOMEN WAKING UP IN EARNEST.

"I do not feel that there is so much difference, after all, between the women of the East and West. We have been asleep. Now we are waking up. The average Chinese woman is still devoted to her home and husband and children, but she is gradually infusing more intelligence into her devotion. She is less independent, as yet, less ready to think and decide for herself, in opposition to her family's wishes. But I do not believe that she is naturally less clever than the Western woman. She is like a child that must learn to stand before it can run."

COPPER WEAPONS OF BLOND ESKIMOS EXHIBITED HERE

Clothing and Household Utensils Brought Back by Stefansson Also Shown.

The American Museum of Natural History places on exhibition today several cases of Eskimau weapons and utensils which Prof. Vilhjalmur Stefansson brought back with him from Coronation Gulf, where he claims to have discovered a tribe of several thousand blond Eskimau, who may believe to be descendants of the last tribe of Eric the Red's Norsemen, who were driven from the shores of Greenland in the fourteenth century.

The exhibit consists of clothing, implements of hunting and fishing and the simple household utensils used by the northern tribes. The clothing is all made by hand from the skins of caribou and seal. The hunting weapons are made of spruce, picked up along the shore and finished off sometimes with pieces of caribou antlers or copper.

Knives, spears and harpoons are made of copper, except for an occasional ultramodern instrument, which is fashioned of iron. Prof. Stefansson found no musical instruments among the tribes except a few drums. He says, however, that they sing well and easily pick up our ragtime and hymns. He thinks the most interesting thing about his collection is the use of copper wherever metal is required. The natives mine themselves and then hammer into shape in primitive fashion. Many of their knives and weapons are said to closely resemble those of the Norsemen, from whom they are believed to be descended. No other Eskimau are known to use copper.

MAZA GOES TO PRISON FOR ATTACK ON GIBSON.

HAVANA, Oct. 8.—Enrique Maza, a Cuban newspaperman, who recently assaulted Hugh G. Gibson, the American

Charge d'Affaires, has been sentenced to two years and a half imprisonment. This is not the extreme penalty under the Cuban law, but was considered by the Court as a fair equivalent for the penalty for the same offense in the United States.
